Another Arrival from New Orleans. The barkentine American Eagle, Captain Luce, arrived at this port yesterday from New Orleans. She was one of the first vessels captured by the rebel privateers, the Confederate steamer Calhoun having taken her while or ber into New Orleans, where the captain (Luce) was re-leased, and the first officer, with the crew, imprisoned. Subsequently Captain Luce joined the steamship Ocean Queen as first officer, and seen after the capture of New Orleans discovered his vessel among those not destroyed. He presented his claims—be being owner—and the vesimmediately given up to him. She was then repaired, chartered, and brings the following cargo:—53

Our Schoolboys and the Wounded Selders.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

New York, July 10, 1862.

This morning, having occasion to be in the vicinity of the Laddee' Home for Sick and Wounded Seldiers, corner of Fifty-drist street and Lexington avenue, my attention was drawn to a company of boys, dressed in uniform sonewhat in the style of the Seventh regiment, preceied by a drummer and the glorious old standawd, the color bearer denoting them to be the Union Guards from Ward School No. 49, and in the midst of a guard with fixed bayonets was a horse, attached to a wagon, covered over with the immortal banner, who made their halt in that imm distal locality.

After haiting, they were ordered by their captain to march, and put through the manuel, which elicited the remark from a wounded soldier, "They do better now than one half the enemy." After their drilt, they commended to unload the wagon, which contained a good supply of ciothes, and other articles necessary to the comfort of those who are so kindly taken care of by those ever ministering angels, the ladies. These wares together with a purse containing nearly one hundred dollars, was the voluntary subscription of many little ones from the above named schools; and who knows but they may yet be called upon to shield and up-hold the flag of their country, and to fill the place of those engaged in nursing those who have so noily fought and bleid in supporting the great bouwark of our institutions.

Lourse, an ecupant of the bospital, was introluced to the boys, who, on the steep made a neal little speech to them, wherein he thanked them in he name of the ladies and themselves for their git, and complimented them on their soldierly bearing &c, when they were marched in double lie maide the building and through the different wards that it was deemed prudent to admittude. It was there a scene was presented to the eye and the thought the billowing worth he heart of a stole or an administ to see the billowing worth is minis hattly even.

"Star Syangled Banner," oh, how my need angel voices, toy, and my eye filled with tears, to hear those angel voices, toy, and my eye filled with tears, to hear those angel voices, tay, it was as a sound from heaven, and made me mourn the realmess and impetuosity of our enemies, that has led the mound of the second tears were were of absolute its flag, then the second tears and the second tears and the second tears as a second to the second tears as a second tear when the second tears as a second tear when the second tears as a second tear the second tears as a second tear that the second tears as a second tear that the second tears a second tear that the second tears are the second tears as a second tear that the second tears are the second tears as a second tear that the second tears are the second tears as a second tear that the second tears are the second tears as a second tear that the second tears are the second tears as a second tear that the second tears are the second tears are the second tears as a second tear that the second tears are the second tears are the second tears as a second tear that the second tears are the second tears are the second tears are the second tears are the second tears as a second tear that the second tears are the

We published the new tariff in yesterday's Hz-The increase of duties which it establishes RALD. meets the views of the public generally. Import ers naturally complain; but this was to be expect-ed. Foreign manufacturers, whose market is curtailed, will, in many cases, have their recourse against their governments, through whose sympathy, active or covert, the rebels have been encouraged to continue their resistance against the government. Had no rebellion broken out, the Morrill tariff would never have been passed or if it had passed it would have been repealed, and the duties on foreign goods lowered by this time. As it is, the United States government has no choice in the matter. In order to maintain the public credit, and pay the interest on the war debt, it is necessary to levy high rates of duty on foreign importations; and, on the other hand, in order to keep specie enough in the country to enable the government and the banks to resume specie payments at the proper time, it is neces-sary to prevent importations of luxuries, or of goods which can, under a protective tariff, be produced in this country. That the new tariff and tax law will inflict suffering on the people of the United States is obvious; this is the price we are paying for the maintenance of our nationality and the preservation of the Union. Severe as the present cost may be, it will not be without some compensating benefit. The war of 1812-13 gave birth to manufacturing industry in this country. The war of 1861-2, which, by a strange perversity, has been encouraged by the manufacturers of Europe, will probably develop that industry to such an extent as to render us wholly independent of Europe hereafter. From henceforth the importing business must necessarily decline in importance.

The foreign commerce of the port for the week ending yesterday is given in the following tables:-

Previously reported 25,226,689 6,310,040 31,498,384

Since January 1.. $26,333,469 6,317,628 34,096,853 On Monday last the banks showed a specie ave rage of $31,790,519, being an increase of $957,893 from the week previous; a loans average of $148, 643,718, being an increase of $29,317; and a depo sits average of $127,496,534, being a decrease of $376,174. Notwithstanding the heavy shipments of specie, we understand that the banks will show ecrease of coin to-morrow, the bulk of the llion which has gone abroad having been drawn from private hands. Some banks are said to have sold part of their gold at the recent advance Others, again, hold that now, if ever, is the time for the banks to hold fast to their gold; to disregard fluctuations in the price, and simply to regard their reserve as the only means by which they can ever again escape from a position of disgrace and resume specipayments. As, however, there is nothing in the condition of our foreign trade which justifies the present price of gold, it is presumed that the anks which have sold specie did so in the confident belief that they would be able to buy it back again shortly on advantageous terms. A small increase in loans and deposits is expected to-morrow. The banks are increasing their discounts by purchases of government securities.

The course of gold and exchange was very eccentric last week. After opening on Monday with gold at 110 and exchange at 121%, on Thurs day gold sold at 117, and bills on London at 130; and yesterday afternoon first class bills were done at 126½ and gold at 114¾ a 115. The advance in gold—which is the regulator of bills—from 107 to 117 was due to the effect produced on the public mind by the accounts of the strategic movement from the Chickahominy to the James river. Thos accounts, reaching the public ear through devious channels, and under circumstances which revealed a desire on the part of the War Department to conceal the truth from the public, produced a most disastrous effect upon public confidence. People began to fear that the task undertaken by the government would not be performed, and that an alarming depreciation of the currency was at hand. Hence merchants in every branch made haste to "hedge" against future contingencies by purchases of gold, and importers who owed money to the other side hurried to their bankers and purchased exchange for remittance at any price. We had, in fact, a panic in currency. Circumstances aided it: not only were we not exporting produce in large amounts, but, in addition to our usual importations, we were taking from Europe large amounts of American securities, bought in happier times, and now sent home in consequence of a prevailing belief abroad that we were on the eve of national bankruptcy. Thus the demand for bills was increased, while the supply was diminished. A few thousand bales of cotton arriving here from the South would have kept gold and exchange down. An authoritative statement that ne more stocks were coming here from Europe for sale would have checked the rise. But in the absence of any such statement, and of any receipts of cotton worth speaking of, the distrust created by the battles before Richmond produced its natural effect. The opponents of the govern-ment and the secret sympathizers with the rebelment and the secret sympathizers with the rebellion—of whom not a few are engaged in the business of drawing or selling exchange on Europe—have taken advantage of the pending panic to denounce Mr. Chase's policy, and to renew the clamor which they made when that policy was first inaugurated. It is difficult to see, however, what policy would have protected the public credit against injury when unfavorable news came to hand. If Mr. Chase, for instance, had been relying for means to carry on the war upon loans negotiated on terms dictated by foreign bankers in New York, the battles before Richmond would have caused an enormous depreciation in government stocks, and would have enabled the bankers to extort sales of these stocks at 20 a 30 a 40 per cent discount. It is evidently better, both in a financial and in a political point of view, for government to pay a little more for supplies and to keep its stocks at a premium than to buy the supplies at the cost of production, and at the same time to see New York sixes selling at 60 a 77. The premium on gold and silver—which has withdrawn them from circulation—is to be rehas withdrawn them from circulation-is to be regrettes. But it is neither unexpected nor irremediable. Commerce rests, at present, on a basis of paper money, which is to say public confidence; and while this is a much better basis, in ordinary times, than any metal whatsoever, it cannot but prove, in war time, a fluctuating foundation for a currency, and one which cannot help giving way when the news is unfavorable. But while the accidents of the hour will naturally from time to time shake the basis of our new currency, and cause the old standard-gold-to advance to a premium, this very advance will yield compensating advantages, and will suggest its own remedy. Every dollar of specie now exported yields a handsome profit to the country. Gold is gold must become manifest, and, if hearding here continues to keep it above par, we must receive a new supply of bullion from Europe.

It is clearly decirable to keep silver in circulation if possible. The United States have not been hitherto producers of silver, and though it is stated on sufficient authority that the Washee mines are yielding very large amounts of the me-tal, no considerable shipments have yet found their way to market, and the supply from this source cannot be permitted to govern calculations with regard to our present necessities. Our silver coin now circulating is worth considerably less than bar silver. The premium, however, being 10 a 11 per cent, there is, notwithstanding the debasement, a handsome profit on the exportation of hoards of silver as an article of merchandise. If hoards of silver as an article or merchangise. It no remedy be discovered the prospect is that the bulk of our silver coin will soon be sent abroad as a remittance. On the other hand, the scarcity of change is becoming a crying evil. At least one hundred retail dealers in various branches of business in this city have issued shinplasters, very many of which are in direct contravention of law. To the public the inconvenience is intolerable. One remedy proposed is to still further debase the silver coin, so that the quarter dollar shall in effect be only worth, in silver, say fifteen to sixteen cents. Another is to prohibit the export of silver, leaving gold to be freely exported. This would be strictly constitutional; an act prohibiting the exporting of specie was passed by Congress on the 14th of April, 1812, and became a law in due course. Similar acts have been pass-our third greatest staple product. An advance of 15 per cent in the value of gold is equivalent to an advance of 15 per cent in wheat, corn, pork or cotton. Until foreign goods rice in an equal ratio, which they have not done thus far, the premium

on gold comes out of the pockets of foreigners.

And, on the other hand, the advance in gold leads necessarily to an active development of our export trade. Every one who has any produce or merchandise to sell is now sending it abroad, for the sake of the high premium on bills. Not only are we ship-ping breadstuffs and provisions in unusual quantities, but leather, tobacco, copper, products of the sea,

&c., &c., &c., are going out to Europe at a rate entirely unprecedented. Meanwhile the advance in exchange is simultaneously putting a stop to all needless imports. Thus, in the course of a very short time, the exchanges must be largely in our favor, the utter groundlessness of a premium on of our following their example. It is, however doubtful whether an embarge on exports of silver would not have the effect of stimulating hoarding here. An act of Congress regulating the issue by cities or banks of paper currency for sums below a dollar, based on deposits of United States stocks, would relieve the community, and obviate losses by individuals. What effect this would have on the silver currency of the country is a problem. The true remedy for the scarcity of both gold and ilver is military success. The money market has not varied much during the past week. Call leans still range from five to six per cent; but within the past day or two, five has been a more common rate than six. Certificates of indebtedness are worth about 90%. There is so little mercantile paper in market that it is hardly worth while quoting it: it is selling at 5 a 6 for short paper, of the highest grade, and at 6 a 7 for long paper. Money must rule easy throughout the summer. The supply is steadily on the increase and there is no demand except from the govern-than they were a week ago. Compared with th standard of gold, however, they are all considerably lower. Every advance of one per cent in gold amounts to a decline of one per cent in stocks; to maintain themselves, stocks must advance in the same ratio as the precious metal. The earnings of the Northern railroads continue very large. They almost all show a substantial increase over the earnings of last year, which were considered quite handsome at the time. This is especially the case with the Central, Erie and Fort Wayne roads, which are the main lines of communication be tween the West and the seaboard. The advance in exchange, which stimulates the movement of breadstuffs and provisions, will naturally tend to increase the freight earnings of the grain lines.
